THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Secretary Welles' report is a plain, business-like document, which, if written when the author was wide awake, must have depicted him for some time past of the illustrious impression, he is supposed to delight in.

Every effort appears to have been employed to maintain the navy in the highest expression of our squadrons at foreign stations.

The only point which has been to any extent available to blockade-runners for the past year is that of Wilmington, and this, the Secretary states, on the authority of the officers stationed off the port, cannot be positively closed.

In the construction of the navy, the navy has been at all times ready to perform its part in an expedition against the port, but has been forced to wait the co-operation of an adequate army force. Of course nothing is said as to whether such a joint expedition has been or is now in contemplation.

The figures in the report show that our navy has materially increased during the past year its present strength, inclusive vessels now contracted, is 671 vessels of 510,000 tons, and carrying 43,000 men, and 1,000 guns.

From December, 1863, to December, 1864, it has increased, carrying 107 guns. Since March 1, 1864, there have been constructed for the navy, 1,000 vessels, of 1,000 tons each.

During the past year twenty-six vessels, carrying one hundred and forty-six guns, have been built by shipyard or contract—quite a large number, and a large increase over the year 1863, when only 1,000 vessels were built, and carrying 107 guns.

Under the head of construction of the navy, the Secretary states that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially increased during the past year, and that the navy has been materially in-

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.

A dispatch to the World from devereux era and other sources that rebel papers have been circulating in the following in Sherman's movement. First, that Sherman's march up the river to reach

Millen was practically unopposed, the only resistance being a skirmish between Kilpatrick and Wheeler.

The march has been a great feat, and he has swept all central Georgia clear of forces, horses, mules and negroes.

It is supposed that he will reach the coast with two able bodied negroes for every white man in his ranks. It is understood that he will allow only able bodied negroes to accompany him.

No having fought any battles in central

Georgia, and having kept the army together he will reach the coast in good order, and abundance of ammunition and food.

There is reason for believing that in addition to negroes, Sherman will be reinforced by 10,000 Union prisoners.

There is a despatch story that the prisoners in camp near Millen on hearing of the approach of Sherman, overpowered their guard and scattered themselves over the country.

The Richmond Examiner of the 7th says:

The military drama in Georgia is drawing rapidly to a dramatic end. Sherman is at last approaching the coast, whether he has travelling twenty-three days. Whether he will complete the trip or not depends very much upon certain facts, which will clear up the matter. There are troops in his front who will not let him pass a single point without a fight. He is reported to be making a dash for the coast, and the Macon Confederates say every body in Greenville has been ordered to meet except Mr. Gilchrist, and a small force occupied by one of the operations of the military.

The Augusta Constitutionalist says Gen.

Brown's headquarters in Macon and is expected to have been to Athens.

The impression now prevails that Sherman is rapidly returning.
